of moral gain might be cited here if it were desirable to do so.

At the request of local granite interests, the railway engineers have nearly completed surveys for a track to the quarries on Rattlesnake hill, which, when constructed, will enable these quarries to successfully compete with tide-water ledges.

To recapitulate, let me say that the sum expended in constructing the great freight yard and the new shops exceeds half a million dollars.

The monthly pay-roll of the Boston & Maine company at Concord is $59,515.19. The yearly pay-roll is $714,182.28.

When the shops are fully equipped with machinery and tools, this amount will be greatly increased.

I have expressed, in a previous paragraph, some doubt whether these expenditures and improvements have yet won a full measure of appreciation from our citizens, but I know that as time goes on their full advantages and helps to other growth and greater trade will be apparent to all. It would seem that they have come as a direct fruit of the lease and consolidation, and that without the consolidation they would not have come at all. They have come without struggle or rivalry with other towns. So we may congratulate ourselves that no enmities have been created, and that there will be no bitter harvests to be garnered hereafter.

I am told, by one who has kept a record, that between eighty and ninety tenements have been built the past year, and one of the finest of business blocks, with complete modern improvements, has been recently finished. All these signs of progress are indications of a sound prosperity that may give us a well-grounded hope for the well-being of the city that is so much to us all.
